gentle art thou for whom thy friends breathe their sincere wish, and in thy soul are gendred, pure thoughts and holy purposes, and thy heart is filled, with fair visions of future joys, that brighten with every touch of thy golden fancy To thee, the high Broadway of life, that startleth to the grave and endeth in Eternity, is strewed with trifles, and a thousand forms of, varied, beauty glitter upon its radiant surface.

Lofty and virtuous are thy sentiments, and thy feelings gush forth in all the warmth of youth and innocence, untaught. The gloomy sorrows that darken the hearts of our race,

And thou art about to leave the earthly world, where a thousand charms may tempt our eyes, or false adroisity greet thy coming with its flattery.

That it may not sink into thy gentle to freeze its generous sympathies, to poison its springs of joy and peace, it of earth's bright scenes, is the prayer of those who never uttered one more pure and holy than thy own. For thy affairs.

But should and you'll
